

Læs dette indlæg af Özcan Arjulovski i the copenhagen Post (klik på artiklen)

The Words of Öz | When we radicalise modern Muslims

Özcan Arjulovski

September 30, 2012 - 08:41

September 11. We all remember the date and what we were doing that day when the 110-story Twin Towers crumbled to the ground and became dust. Eleven years have since passed, but did we ever rise from that dust?

A certain amount of fear was created that day, and that fear had a visual character: that of a Muslim male with an Islamic mindset. To this day, we still link the Islamic mindset with an anti-democratic mindset, and sometimes even with terroristic behaviour. It's important to differentiate the modern Muslims

Özcan Arjulovski was born in Sweden but has lived in Denmark since he was five years old. His parents came to Denmark in the late '60s from the Turkish part of Macedonia. He has a passion for writing poetry and has written political columns for

Latest CPH Post voices

You're Still Here? | Refugees deserve more than childlike notions of fairness

The Words of Öz | When we radicalise modern Muslims

The Lynch Report | First impressions

Still Adjusting | Back off, rugbrød fascists

Crazier than Christmas | Do you do Denglish?

MacCarthy's World | Battle of the sexes

Christian Values | I'm not afraid to say it: I love Copenhagen

Popular Threads

Unlucky Lions undone in Bucharest

1 comment · 2 hours ago

Frank Jensen on accommodating foreigners, legalising dope and setting the national agenda

1 comment · 2 hours ago